1. Introduction

- A population census is a total count of the country's population, where demographic, social and economic information is gathered about the people who live in the country.
- Census 2011 is the third biggest democratic census to be conducted in South Africa.
- The aim of a census is to provide government, institutions and agencies with information which is essential for policy development, planning, monitoring, and evaluation of developmental projects and informed decision-making.
- In October 2011, the people living within the borders of South Africa were counted. De facto census (a census in which people are enumerated according to where they stay on census night) was used where the reference night was 9–10 October 2011.
- The country was divided into approximately 103 000 data collection areas called enumeration areas (EAs). Over 120 000 enumerators, 30 000 fieldworker supervisors (FWSs) and 6 000 fieldwork co-coordinators (FWCs) were employed to collect the data from persons in the households and institutions.
- The data collected were processed using scanning technology at the Stats SA corporate Data Processing Centre (DPC) in Pretoria. The captured data were edited and made accessible for analysis.
- In every census, some people or households are missed (undercount), or counted twice (overcount). During November 2011, a post enumeration survey (PES) was conducted to measure undercount or overcount in the census.
- The numbers and percentages presented in this pamphlet have been adjusted according to the PES findings.
