

The Population and Housing Census of Serbia is now underway - the enumeration is planned for the period of 1 - 15 October, with the census moment set for midnight of 1 October.

The census adopted a traditional approach, with around 50.000 enumerators, instructors and field supervisors canvassing the country and visiting all households in more than 6.000 settlements. Methodologically, the census is based on international recommendations and it also includes several topics for the first time, such as the question about the motives for living abroad (if a respondent lived abroad for more than a year). The first modern census in Serbia dates back to 1834, so the 2011 Population and Housing Censuses builds on a long tradition.
