Suggested questions on international migration (based on country practices)

Guidance note¹ for the use in population censuses and household surveys March 2021

Introduction

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development² seeks to ensure that "no one is left behind". To monitor progress in achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) for vulnerable groups, including international migrants, SDG 17.18 calls for the disaggregation for data, including by migratory status.³

The Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration⁴ calls on Member States to strengthen international migration data by improving the collection, analysis and dissemination of accurate, reliable, comparable data, disaggregated by sex, age, migration status and other characteristics. The Global Compact also calls for integrating migration-related topics in national censuses (objective 1, action g), "such as country of birth, country of birth of parents, country of citizenship, country of residence five years prior to the census, most recent arrival date and reason for migrating."

In response to the demand for accurate migration data, this note provides guidance for improving the quality and comparability of international migration statistics collected through national population censuses and household surveys. It was prepared on the basis of a comprehensive review of national census questionnaires⁵ for the 2010 round of population and housing censuses. While this guidance note draws primarily from experience of national censuses, much of its content also applies to household surveys.

As an output of the United Nations Expert Group on Migration Statistics, the note has been reviewed by experts in the Group.

Questions on international migration

The following questions are covered in this note:

- A. Country of birth, identifying foreign-born population;
- B. Country of citizenship, identifying population of foreign citizens;
- C. Acquisition of citizenship, distinguishing citizens by birth from naturalized citizens;
- D. Country of birth of parents, identifying population who have foreign-born parent(s);
- E. Household members who have ever resided abroad, identifying potential returned migrants;
- F. Household members (or former household members) currently residing abroad, identifying potential emigrants;

- G. Year or period of arrival in the country, distinguishing international migrants who have recently arrived from those who arrived many years ago;
- H. Reason for migration, measuring main reasons for people migrating into the country that can be asked to foreign-born persons or foreign citizens, or sometimes returned migrants.

More detailed guidance on each of the questions here; as well as statistics and indicators that can be produced based on the above questions are available in Chapter VIII of the *United Nations Handbook on Measuring International Migration through Population Censuses*⁶.

Additional observations

"Country of birth", "country of citizenship" and "year of arrival (for foreign-born population more specifically)" are considered core topics for censuses, according to the Principles and Recommendations for Population and Housing Censuses, rev. 3. "Citizenship acquisition" is considered an additional topic in the same Recommendations. "Ever-resided abroad" or "reason for migration", are only included in the regional Recommendations (Conference of European, Recommendations for the 2020 Censuses of Population and Housing), or in the most recent draft of the *International Recommendations on Refugee Statistics*⁷.

"Emigration of household member residing abroad" is not addressed in any international or regional recommendations. As discussed in the *United Nations Handbook on Measuring International Migration through Population Censuses*⁶, there is an intrinsic challenge in using censuses to measure emigration. However, given that close to 40 per cent of the countries or areas in the world have collected data on emigration through censuses in the 2010 census round, a clear guidance is needed to improve reliability and comparability of the data collected.

The above questions should be considered a menu of options from which countries can choose, based on their national priority. Factors to help countries in deciding which question(s) to incorporate in their censuses include (a) the needs of policy makers and other data users; (b) the burden on respondents, (c) technical competence of enumerators, (d) resources availability, and (e) whether data are already available from other data sources. All questions proposed here should be thoroughly reviewed, tested and adapted to national circumstances.
