Abstract:

The presentation focuses on the impact of the main changes introduced by the 19th ICLS Resolution on the measurement of the gender inequality on the Moldovan labour market; on the acknowledgement of women's contribution to the country's development and their unused potential. Labour Force Survey data were used to estimate indicators using definitions close to those recommended by the new standards on statistics of work. Examples of how new standards could offer more relevant data for policy development and monitoring are offered.
