

Review of countries' practices in measuring women's political participation at the local level

Julie Ballington

Policy Advisor on Political Participation, UN-Women Headquarters in New York

Abstract

This presentation will discuss some preliminary findings of UN Women's research on women's political participation at the local level. It provides insights into current practices and gaps in national and regional monitoring of women's representation in local government, and suggests implications for a standardized measurement of women's representation in local government.