

Search

First Published: 2015-10-20

What's it like to be a woman in 2015?

Figures from 102 countries show that more than a third of women have been victim of physical or sexual violence at some point in their lives, Middle East Online

UNITED NATIONS (United States) - Women worldwide live longer lives and are more educated than at any time in the past 20 years, but more than a third have been victims of violence, a UN report said Tuesday.

The findings are contained in "The World's Women," a five-year study providing an up-to-date, global picture of the progress of women and girls on critical issues in their lives.

The sweeping study, the sixth to be released by the United Nations, includes new data on women's unpaid work and on violence against women, an issue that was not even monitored 20 years ago, said researcher Francesca Grum.

Figures from 102 countries, the highest number surveyed thus far, showed that more than a third of women have been victim of physical or sexual violence at some point in their lives.

"Violence against women is present everywhere. It's really a global concern," said Grum.

Worldwide, two out of three family-related homicides target women, the study showed.

The high prevalence of violence is matched by an equally pervasive silence, with victims still reluctant to confide to anyone about their ordeal.

The UN research team looked at indicators in 70 countries and found that fewer than 40 percent of victims will break the silence but they will talk to friends or family, instead of police or social services.

Fewer than 10 percent will go to the police.

On a brighter note, the report found that attitudes toward violence were starting to change in nearly all countries where information on the problem was available.

The level of acceptance of "wife-beating" decreases over time as public awareness rises, the report said.

At least 119 countries have passed laws on domestic violence, 125 have laws addressing sexual harassment and 52 have laws on marital rape.

Women worldwide remain in low-paying jobs, earning on average between 70 and 90 percent of what men earn, the study found.

In developing countries, they spend on average three hours more per day than men on household chores and caring for family members – a figure that drops to two hours a day for women in wealthier countries.

The number of countries adopting legislation providing maternity and family benefits has grown.

Over half of all countries currently offer at least 14 weeks of maternity leave but these measures often exclude workers in such sectors as agriculture or domestic work.

Women's life expectancy now reaches 72 globally, compared to 68 for men.

Victims of violence are still reluctant to confide about their ordeal

Assad-Putin talks focus on political solution to end Syria war

Huthi rockets kill at least 22 civilians in Taz

Netanyahu sparks outrage by linking Palestinians to Holocaust

Iran supreme leader endorses nuclear deal

Trash pickers are Morocco's backbone for waste recycling

Sudan accepts invitation to new round of peace talks

Bahrain charges 24 people with forming ISIS cell

Sudan releases blocked supplies for peacekeepers in Darfur

In Ramallah, UN chief pleads for end to spiralling violence

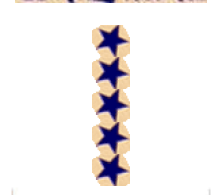

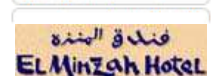

UN envoy defies Libya rivals: Political process goes on!

Tunisian rapper Klay BBJ freed

Assad on unannounced visit to Moscow

Canada withdrawing fighter jets from Iraq, Syria

US ground-attack planes arrive at Incirlik base in Turkey

In Jerusalem, UN chief demands quick action to calm tensions

Number of cholera cases rises to more than 1,800 in Iraq

Kerry calls for return 'to basics' on Jerusalem holy sites

Algeria troops kill three Islamist gunmen east of capital

UNHCR registers spike in refugee arrivals amid fears of worsening weather

Abbas to address UN rights body next week

French far-right leader goes on trial for anti-Muslim comments

New regime offensives trigger mass exodus in Syria

Migrants defy heavy rain to cross into Balkans

Iran rejects Saudi accusations of cross-border meddling

Moody's: Long-term drop in oil prices to drive fiscal reforms in GCC

UN chief in unannounced visit to calm Israel-Palestinian violence

Slovenia calls army to help 'manage' migrant surge

Reconnaissance drone reportedly crashes in Yemen

Low turnout on first day of Egypt vote

Libyan parliament rejects UN-proposed unity government

Post-Gathafi Libya struggling to find national identity

45 killed in Russian air strikes in Syria's Latakia

Drone downed by Turkey was made in Russia

Turkish PM: our country is not concentration camp

US working to avoid 'total destruction' of Syria

Berlin hails refugee progress with Ankara

Kerry defends Israel over Mideast violence

Thousands of migrants stranded in Serbia-Croatia border

Sudan sends ground troops to Yemen to bolster Arab coalition

Iraq issues arrest warrant against Trade Minister on graft charges

Hezbollah presence in Syria
'larger than ever before'

Kerry enters Israeli-Palestinian morass

UN threatens sanctions for those who block Libya
peace deal

Egypt votes to restore political stability

Iran breaks silence on participation in Syria
ground war
